

CENTER, INC.

Mental health issues don't just go away over time. Left untreated, these issues will likely worsen and may cause significant long-term problems at home, with friends, and in the workplace. Seeking help early is always best but it is never too late to reach out. Addressing the issue even years later allows mental health professionals the opportunity to provide positive treatment and plan to provide some light at the end of the tunnel. The key is to identify the need early and to seek assistance. Hamilton Center offers services to veterans and family members to address the following issues:

Hamilton Center's MVP program appreciates the dedication and sacrifice required of our current military and our veteran families. The spouses and children of our warriors make up the backbone of our military and ensure that our service members can concentrate on their mission. Once the mission is completed and the veteran returns home, it is the family who helps put the pieces back together.

It's never too late, talk to us today.

Hamilton Center offers MVP services at each of our locations.

Suicide Prevention Services

Suicide rates among military and veterans have reached epidemic proportions in the United States. At one point, there were over 22 veterans completing suicide every day. That number has since dropped to just over one per day but at Hamilton Center, we believe that one is too many and that zero is an achievable goal. MVP provides services to include:

Whether a veteran has recently returned or has been home for years, returning service members frequently suffer in silence and are reluctant to reach out for help. Family members can be a valuable resource overwhelmed by the stress, worry, and additional responsibilities that arise when their hero is absent. This added pressure can have a significant negative impact on the family's mental health, especially spouses, partners, Separation from loved ones is especially difficult for children in a military family. Their needs are unique and may need to be professionally addressed. MVP can link families to Hamilton
